

How is it that

How is it that Scientists get thousands of Pounds to find out how the universe began When there are Plenty of Mysteries nearer to home to be Solved.

For instance, how is it that When you throw away the dish water You always find a tea spoon at the bottem of your washing up bowl

Or how is it that When you come back from the Launderette all your Pairs of Socks have turned into odd ones

Or how is it that

You start off in the morning with a dozen Ballpoint pens on your desk and the end of the day they've all gone

Or how is it that

When you've now to do time really drags by But when you've plenty to do time goes and flies by,

Or how is that

When you're a kid, your Mum sends you to bed when you're wide awake and gets you up in the morning when you're fast asleep.

So forget the big bang, The Lochness monster and UFOs

Let's concentrate on more serious things and find out whether or not there is a Planet where all our Ballpoint pens and Socks go or is there a Bermuda Triangle in every washing up bowl which makes teaspoons disappear and reappear, at random or is there a force that messes about with time when we're either bored or busy or do Aliens come down to Earth each evening and morning and take over the minds of our mothers

I don't know, but I do know!
The answer is out there.
